nedy and patriotism to their country by displaying our country's flag after the death of the president. Perhaps more flags were visible in the community than in many years as residents draped black cloth over the front of the flag

Black cloth was draped over the entrance of St. Casimir's Church as parishioners mourned the death of President Kennedy who was the first Catholic to serve in the nation's top executive position. All Sunday Masses were said for the soul of the late president. Clergymen in this diocese departed from the scheduled sermon to speak to their congrega-

One of the first indications of the death of the president was this flag which stands in front of the Marion Heights Post Office. The flag. Her so many others in the country, was sadily lowered to half-mast. President Kennedy was deeply loved by the Marion Heights Postmaster who kept pictures of the first family hanging in a place of honor in the post office.

STUNNED AND SILENT

Boro Residents Mourn Death of Great Leader

Stunned and silent, Kulpmont residents were numb with disbelief as news of the assassination of President Kennedy flowed through the community as it did throughout the Kulpmont residents were full of grief that will be a long time in passing. Most of the town had no immediate comment when the news of the assassination was first heard. The shock was too great and the grief was too heavy

A passer-by in the community could only note one difference in Friday from that of other days, that the streets were almost empty of residents. The sudder silence that fell over Kulpmont was broken only by the blare of television sets echoing a blow-by-blow description of the tragedy and all its woeful repercussions.

Perhaps the first acknowledgement of the assassination of the popular leader could be seen in the office window of Attorney Peter Krehel. A long-time admir-er of John Fritzgerald Kennedy even from his days in the Senate, Attorney Krehel immediately bought a black cloth and draped it over a picture of the late President which occupied a position of honor in the window of his law

FLAGS DISPLAYED

Later, when realization of the Later, when realization of the day's happenings registered and people were again able to function, flags which fly in front of the Kulpmont and Marion Heights Post Office buildings were lowered to half-mast. Other residents in to half-mast. Other residents in the community then began display the American flag President, whose face was seen so often via television in one's liv-ing room that he seemed like a member of one's own family.

The faith of community residents in God and their love of country and the man who lead it was then demonstrated as many went quietly to their respective churches to pray for the late president and his family.

All Masses said Sunday in both it. Casimir's and St. Mary's Catholic Churches were said for the soul of the late and great president. Many residents reported that they prayed in their homes throughout the week-end. Men and women alike unashamedly admitted crying over the loss

JOHNSON IN KULPMONT

The man who now takes over the Presidency of the United States, Lyndon B. Johnson, is no stranger to Kulpmont. This picture taken during the 1960 campaign recalls memories of the tall, hand-shaking Mr. Johnson who delighted St. Casimir youngsters as he paused on his motorcade through Kulpmont to shake their hands. Perhaps these same youngsters will have a keener interest in history as they remember the happy hand-shaking days of Johnson's campaign and the sad assassination of President Kennedy.
